Autumn, also termed as "fall" in North America is an intermediary phase in between summer and winter. Autumn is a specific season in the temperate zone. The end of summer signifies the arrival of autumn. Autumn is characterized by mellowness.

Autumn leaves have a reddish tinge which falls away during this season thereby paving the way for further growth. To a lot of people this one of the most beautiful times of year the days are bright and the air is crisp. Along with the weather changes comes one of nature's most beautiful displays of colors with the leaves on the trees changing to beautiful reds yellows and oranges.
